FOREWORD

In terms of area and population, Romania is a middle-sized country of the European continent. Geographically, it is located in the centre of Europe, at the intersection of the continent's three great regions: Central Europe, Eastern Europe and the Balkan Peninsula. It actually belongs to none, but shares traditions, accomplishments and disappointments with each of them.

The Romanians are a Latin people speaking a Romance language, like the French, the Italians, the Spanish, or the Portuguese. But, since it developed in the Eastern half of the Roman Empire, it remained a Latin island surrounded by peoples having other origins. Among the Latin nations, the Romanians are the only people who embraced the Eastern Christian faith, while proudly preserving their Roman heritage. A sense of their ethnic insularity in the area has kept Romanians available for a fruitful communication with other peoples and cultures and helped them to develop a culture of particular interest, which gave the world names of great fame.

In the aftermath of World War II, the Romanians, like other nations that fell under communist rule, had to live through the most disastrous utopian social experiment of the century. The genuine culture was regarded in those years as the main form of resistance to the dictatorship, of preserving human dignity.

Romania is now facing a new historical challenge in a painful transition to functioning democracy and market economy. Despite enormous difficulties, the people of Romania are determined to write this new chapter in the country's history as a part of the European and Atlantic structures. The Romanians have engaged in a meaningful open dialogue with the world, trying to explain what they are and to communicate the values of their cultural heritage.

This directory is meant as a means to make this dialogue easier. It provides, besides a survey of the Romanian culture, an X-ray of its present institutional structure. The main institutions from Bucharest and from the principal towns of the 41 counties are recorded.

The editors are fully aware of the risks assumed, for this is a work about a society in fast process of change, where institutions emerge and vanish overnight, change their name, address, telephone and fax number. Nevertheless, they hope that, with all its possible shortcomings, this directory will certainly prove extremely useful.

ROMANIA – AN ENCYCLOPEDIC SURVEY

OFFICIAL NAME: ROMÂNIA (ROMANIA in English, ROUMANIE in French, RUMÄNIEN in German). This name was adopted in 1862, after the nation-state had been founded through the union of the Romanian principalities of Wallachia and Moldavia in 1859. International abbreviation: RO.

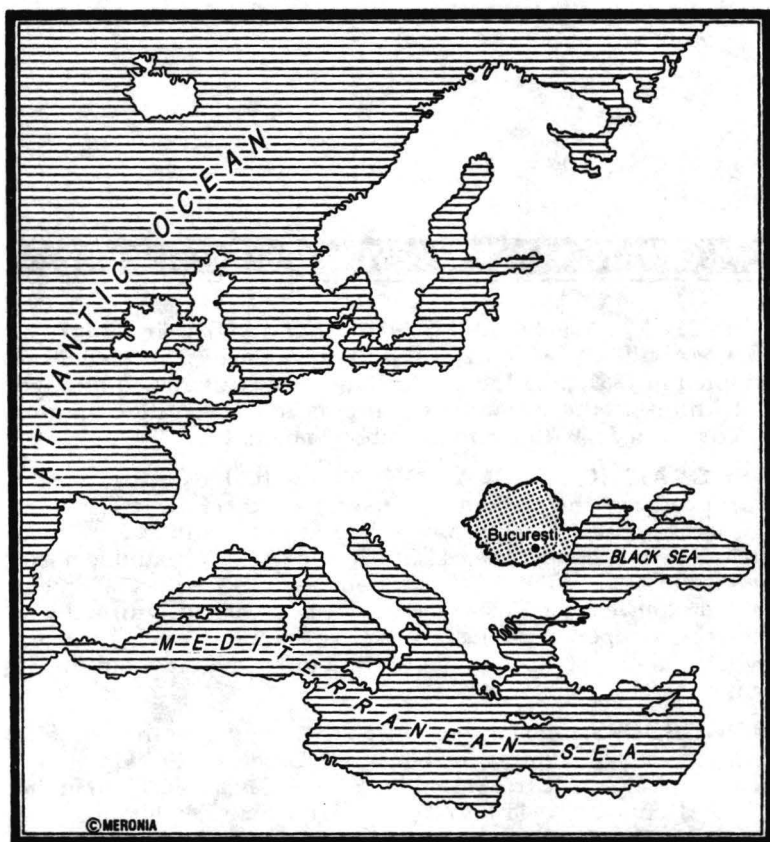

GEOGRAPHICAL LOCATION: State situated in SE Central Europe, N of the Balkan Peninsula, on the Lower Danube, bordering on the Black Sea, within and outside the Carpathian arch. Romania lies between 43°37'07" and 48°15'06" latitude north and 20°15'44" and 29°41'24" longitude east, its territory – located midway between the North Pole and the Equator and, also, midway between Europe's western and eastern extremities – being crossed by the parallel of 45° latitude north and by the meridian of 25° longitude east.

NEIGHBOURS: Romania borders on five countries – the Republic of Moldova (681.3 km) in the NE and E, Ukraine (649.4 km) in the N and E, Bulgaria (631.3 km) in the S, Yugoslavia (546.4 km) in the SW and Hungary (448 km) in the W. Its sixth neighbour is the Black Sea (193.5 km).

AREA: 238,391 sq.km, about the same size as Britain, which ranks Romania 13th in Europe and 80th in the world. Romania has an oval shape, measuring 735 km from east to west and 530 km from north to south.

NATIONAL FLAG (proportion 3/2): Three equal vertical stripes of red, yellow and blue (by the staff).

NATIONAL COAT OF ARMS (since 1992): A blue shield featuring an eagle having a cross in its beak and, on its breast, an escutcheon with the symbols of the Romanian historical provinces (Wallachia, Moldavia, Transylvania, Banat, Oltenia and Dobrudja). In its claws, the eagle holds the insignia of sovereignty – a sceptre and a sword.

STATE ANTHEM (since 1990): Awake, Ye, Romanian, lyrics by Andrei Mureșanu (1816-1863) and music by Anton Pann (1796-1854).

NATIONAL DAY (since 1990): December 1, the anniversary of the Great Assembly held at Alba Iulia in 1918, when Transylvania's union to Romania was voted, a moment that brought the union of all Romanians in a single state.

LEGAL HOLIDAYS: January 1 and 2 (New Year), Easter Monday, May Day, December 1 (the national day), December 25 and 26 (Christmas).

STANDARD TIME: East European time (GMT + 2 hours). Daylight saving time (GMT + 3 hours) applies between March and October.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES: The metric system, in force since 1866.

NATIONAL CURRENCY (since 1867): Leu (plural lei) – ROL, with the subdivision ban (plural bani). 1 US $=17,916 Lei; 1 DM=9,290 Lei; 1 £=28,903 Lei; 1 Fr.F=2,770 Lei; 1 Euro=18,170 Lei; 100 Yen=17,192 Lei (November 29, 1999).

PHYSICAL FEATURES: The Carpathian Mountains hold 31% of the country's total area, hills and tablelands stand for 36%, while plains extend over 33% of the total area. The highest elevation is Moldoveanu Peak (2,544 m) in the Făgăraș Massif of the Southern Carpathians.

RIVERS AND LAKES: Most rivers spring from the Carpathian Mountains and flow into the Danube directly or through their tributaries. The Danube crosses the territory of Romania along 1,075 km and empties into the Black Sea through a delta of 5,050 sq.km, of which 4,340 sq.km on the Romanian territory, the biggest delta in Europe. Major rivers: Mureș, Prut, Olt and Siret. Of the 3,500 lakes, only 300 exceed 1 sq.km in area.

CLIMATE: Temperate continental, with four clear-cut seasons. Average temperature -3°C in wintertime and 22-24°C in summertime. Average annual rainfall: ca. 640 mm.

DISTRIBUTION OF AREA: Arable area (39.2%), woods (28%), pastures and hayfields (20.5%), vineyards and orchards (2.3%), rivers and lakes (3.7%), buildings, roads and railways (4.3%), other areas (1.8%).

NATURAL PRESERVES: Romania has 810 protected areas totaling 1,200,000 hectares (5% of the country's area). Of these, three are biosphere preserves (the Danube Delta, the Retezat Massif and Pietrosul Rodnei) and 14 are national parks.

POPULATION (July 1, 1999): 22,489,000 (10th place in Europe and 43rd in the world). 55% of the population is urban and 45% is rural. Density: 94.2 per sq.km (26th place in Europe and 74th in the world). Birth rate: 10.5‰; death rate: 13.0‰; natural growth: -2.5‰. Life expectancy: 65.5 years for men and 73.3 years for women. Structure by age groups: 0-14 years (19.1%), 15-59 years (62.6%), 60 years and over (18.3%). The marriage rate is 4.6 per thousand population, while the divorce rate is 1.5 per thousand.

ETHNIC STRUCTURE: According to the 1992 census, 89.4% of the total population was Romanian, and 10.6% belonged to the ethnic minorities. There were 1,624,959 Hungarians (7.1%), 401,087 Gypsies (1.7%), 119,562 Germans (0.5%), 65,764 Ukrainians (0.3%), 8,955 Jews (0.04%), etc.

RELIGION: The 1992 census indicates the following religious structure: 19,802,385 Eastern Orthodox (86.8%); 1,161,942 Roman-Catholics (5%); 802,454 Reformed (3.5%); 223,327 Greek-Catholics (1%); 220,824 Pentecostals (1%); 109,462 Baptists (0.5%); 77,546 Adventists (0.3%); 76,708 Unitarians (0.3%); 55,928 Muslims (0.2%); 49,963 Church of Christ (0.2%); 39,119 Augustan Evangelical (0.2%); 28,141 Old Rite Church (0.1%); 21,221 Evangelical Presbyterian (0.1%); 56,329 other denominations (0.2%); 34,645 freethinkers (0.15%).

OFFICIAL LANGUAGE: Romanian. The easternmost representative of the Romance languages, Romanian is derived from the Latin spoken in ancient times in the Roman provinces of Dacia and Moesia. The Romanian language uses a 31-letter Latin alphabet. Ethnic minorities can use their mother tongue in school, administration, the judiciary, etc. The largest ethnic minority speaks the Hungarian language. English, French and German are the most widely used foreign languages.

LITERACY RATE: 95.3%.

ADMINISTRATIVE DIVISIONS: Communes, towns, and counties. The 41 counties comprise 263 towns and cities (82 of which are municipalities) and 2,685 communes (with 13,285 villages). The capital-city, Bucharest, has county status. A county has an average area of 5,800 sq.km and an average population of 500,000 inhabitants.

CAPITAL-CITY: Bucharest, with a population of 2,016,000 and an area of 228 sq.km. In 1459 it became the seat of ruler Vlad Țepeș, in the 17th-19th centuries it was the capital of Wallachia, and since 1862 it has been the capital of Romania.

CITIES: Romania has 263 towns and cities, 25 of which have a population of over 100,000, while eight of them exceed 300,000. Besides the capital, these are: Iași (348,000), Constanța (342,000), Cluj-Napoca (332,000), Galați (330,000), Timișoara (324,000), Brașov (314,000) and Craiova (313,000).

AIRPORTS: The capital-city has two airports – Bucharest-Otopeni, for international traffic, and Bucharest-Băneasa for internal and international traffic. Another 15 cities have airports; the airports of Constanța, Timișoara, Arad, Sibiu and Suceava also handle international traffic.

PORTS: Constanța is the biggest port in the entire Black Sea region. Other seaports are Sulina and Mangalia. The main ports on the Danube are Orșova, Drobeta-Turnu Severin, Giurgiu, Călărași and Cernavodă. Brăila, Galați and Tulcea are both sea and river ports.

DANUBE-BLACK SEA CANAL: Inaugurated in 1984, the Canal is 64.2 km long, 110-140 m wide and 7-8.5 m deep. Since 1992, when the Main-Danube Canal in Germany was opened, the Danube-Black Sea Canal has ensured a direct connection between the Black Sea (Constanța) and the North Sea (Rotterdam).

HISTORY: Like the other Latin peoples, the Romanian people came into being in the first millennium A.D. and has lived uninterruptedly in the territory inhabited by its ancestors, the Dacians – who belonged to the Indo-European family of the Thracians, in the first millennium. At present, the Romanians are the sole descendants of the Eastern Romanity. In the Middle Ages, the Romanians lived in three distinct but neighbouring principalities: Wallachia, Moldavia and Transylvania. The nation-state, founded in 1859, when Wallachia and Moldavia united, proclaimed its full independence from the Ottoman Porte in 1877. In 1918, at the end of World War I, the other provinces inhabited by Romanians – Bessarabia, Bukovina and Transylvania – united with Romania. After World War II, Romania, along with other East European countries, was included in the influence sphere of the Soviet Union. The popular revolt in December 1989 removed the dictatorship of Nicolae Ceaușescu and the communist regime, reinstating democracy based on a multiparty system and market economy. All political forces support integration in the European and Euro-Atlantic structures of NATO and the European Union. In a zone of Europe ravaged by interethnic conflicts and crises, Romania has proved itself in the last decade to be an element of equilibrium, stability and cooperation.

THE STATE: Under the 1991 Constitution, Romania is a parliamentary republic. Legislative power is exercised by a bicameral parliament made up of the 343-seat Chamber of Deputies and the 143-seat Senate. MPs are elected by universal and direct suffrage, for a four-year term. Executive power is vested in the Government, lead by a Prime Minister appointed by the President. The members of the Government are appointed by the Prime Minister and endorsed by Parliament. The head of the state is the President, who is also supreme commander of the armed forces. He is elected by universal and direct vote, for at the most two consecutive four-year terms. Head of State: Emil Constantinescu (b. November 19, 1939), elected on November 17, 1996.

ARMED FORCES: In 1998 the armed forces totaled 120,000 men in the land forces, 15,000 in the navy and 45,000 in the air force. Military service is mandatory for men over the age of 20, and lasts 12 months or six months in the case of reduced-term conscripts.

POLITICAL LIFE: The collapse of the communist system was followed by return to a democratic regime based on a multi-party system. After the 1996 elections, when 50 parties ran, the Democratic Convention of Romania (an alliance spearheaded by the Christian Democratic National Peasant Party and the Liberal Party), the Social-Democratic Union (the Democratic Party and the Social Democratic Party) and the Democratic Union of Hungarians in Romania (the party of ethnic Hungarians) formed a coalition cabinet. The Social Democracy Party of Romania, which had ruled between 1992 and 1996, the Greater Romania Party and the Romanian National Unity Party are the main opposition parties.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS: Romania has diplomatic ties with 176 states and is a member of the UN and its specialized agencies. In 1993 Romania became a member of the Council of Europe, in 1994 it was the first East-European country to sign the Partnership for Peace with NATO and in 1995 it became an associate to the European Union.

THE ECONOMY: Considerable natural resources, particularly the rich deposits of gold, silver, copper, salt and coal, favoured the country's economic development prior to World War II. Beginning in 1857, Romania was for 120 years Europe's second biggest producer of crude and held a top place in world methane gas production. Moreover, soil fertility accounted for Romania's being, up until World War II, one of Europe's major grain exporters. The economic policy conducted by the communist regime that took over after the war, based on state ownership, rigid planning and forceful nationalization, prevented economic progress. After Ceaușescu's dictatorship was overthrown in 1989, economic restructuring has been a major goal. Privatization and investment by foreign companies are steadily pursued. Despite inherent transition difficulties, the private sector contributes 58% of the GDP; in 1999 foreign investments reached 4.1 billion dollars. 1998 GDP stood at 338,670 billion Lei, while the per capita GDP was of 15.05 million Lei. The GDP share of the various economic sectors is the following: industry (32%), agriculture and forestry (16%), services (38%), construction (5%), other sectors (9%). The average monthly rate of inflation in 1998 was 2.9%.

ACTIVE POPULATION (Aug. 1, 1999): 4,760,500, of whom 1,974,300 in industry, 589,700 in commerce, 407,200 in education, 342,600 in construction, 293,400 in transportation, 251,200 in agriculture and 125,700 in the public administration. Unemployment stood at 1,114,200 persons (11.3% of the total active population), while the number of pensioners was of 5,913,000.

FOREIGN TRADE (1998): Exports totaled $ 8,302 million, and imports $ 10,926 million. Major partners: Italy, Germany, France and the USA. 65% of exports were bound for European Union member states, which also were the source of 62% of Romania's imports.

SCIENCE AND CULTURE: The highest scientific and cultural forum of the country is the Romanian Academy, founded in 1867. Comprising 14 sections, it has 175 members and 92 honorary members from 21 countries. The Academy has three branches – in Iași, Cluj-Napoca and Timișoara, and coordinates 66 research institutes with nearly 2,600 researchers. The private publishing sector (ca. 3,000 publishing houses) annually puts out about 6,300 book titles with a circulation of approx. 15 million copies. The 13,800 public libraries, with their 160 million volumes, have a readership in excess of 6 million. Romania has 144 theatrical and musical institutions which hold 16,000 shows a year for an audience of 4 million. Approx. 9 million persons annually visit the country's 506 museums. In the last decade, a dramatic decline has occurred in the number of moviegoers, due to competition from extended TV networks.

EDUCATION: The educational system comprises: kindergartens (children aged 3 to 6), primary schools (1st to 4th grade), secondary schools (5th to 8th grade), and high schools (9th to 12th grade). Grades 1st to 8th are compulsory. Vocational, apprentice and foremen schools last 1-2 years. Higher education extends over 4 to 6 years. Since 1990 there are private schools (notably in the area of higher education), and university autonomy has been applied. Romania has 29,400 schools for a school population of 4.6 million (20% of the total population); the teaching staff counts 312,000 persons.

MASS MEDIA: Over 90% of the institutions in this sector are privately owned. There are about 1,550 newspapers and magazines (about 170 in the languages of ethnic minorities), of which 100 are local and regional dailies. There are 4.2 million TV subscribers and 4.1 million radio subscribers. With its about 3 million cable TV subscribers, Romania places among the first countries in Europe in this respect.

SPORTS: The chief team sport is soccer (the undeniable star of the last decade is Gheorghe Hagi), followed by handball, basketball, volleyball and rugby. Tennis, in which players like Ilie Năstase have earned world fame, or gymnastics with the former world and Olympic champion Nadia Comăneci, are also very popular. In 1999, runner Gabriela Szabo was acknowledged world queen of women's track and field. The hierarchy of sports according to the number of Olympic medals won in this century is the following: gymnastics (51 medals, including 16 gold), rowing (29 medals, 12 gold), canoe-kayak (31 medals, 9 gold), track and field (26 medals, 9 gold), wrestling (32 medals, 7 gold).

TOURISM: Romania boasts a remarkable tourism potential, owing to the diverse landscape (from the crests of the Carpathians to the sunny Black Sea shore), the abundant ancient Dacian and Roman vestiges and especially the medieval monuments, to the originality and vitality of folk culture and, last but not least, to the Romanians' hospitality. The capital-city, Bucharest, formerly nicknamed "the Paris of the East," is one of the biggest cities in the region. The Romanian Black Sea coast is famed for its 16 resorts, which line the shore over a distance of 50 km. The Danube Delta, with its exquisite landscapes and wildlife, is unique in Europe. Southern Transylvania is well known as the place where visitors can see Romania's most beautiful medieval citadels – Sibiu, Sighişoara and Braşov. The Bârsa Land, situated deep within the Carpathian arch, is Europe's most compact zone of fortified village churches. This same zone is famous also for the Dracula-related Bran Castle. Northern Moldavia is privileged owing to the exterior murals on 15th-16th century churches, which are UNESCO-protected monuments. The town of Târgu Jiu takes pride in an open-air sculptural ensemble – the Endless Column, the Table of Silence, and the Gate of the Kiss – authored by Constantin Brâncuşi (who was born in the nearby village of Hobiţa). In 1998, 4.8 million foreigners visited Romania and 6.9 million Romanians traveled abroad.

THE ROMANIAN CULTURE

GENERAL FEATURES

Romania has a unique culture, the product of its geography and of its distinct historical evolution. Romanians are the sole Latin people in the Eastern Orthodox area and the only Christian Orthodox nation among the Latin peoples. Their sense of identity has always been deeply related to their Roman roots, in conjunction with their Orthodoxy. A sense of their ethnic insularity in the area has kept Romanians available for a fruitful communication with other nations and cultures. From the first mediaeval forms of state organization, in the 14th century, down to the 18th century, Romanian culture and civilization showed two major tendencies: one towards Central and Western Europe and the other oriented towards the Eastern Orthodox world, with one or the other prevailing at various times in history. Architecture developed both trends for centuries and gave interesting syntheses; painting emerged under religious canons at first, close to the great Byzantine tradition.

There has always been a special relationship between folklore and the learned culture. The once prevailingly rural character of the Romanian communities resulted in an exceptionally vigorous and creative traditional culture, of which the ballad Miorița (The Ewe Lamb) is a brilliant example. Folk creations were the main literary genre until the 18th century, becoming a source of inspiration and a structural model for cultivated artists. Then, for a long time learned culture grew in an official environment, around princely courts, as well as in monasteries. The first printed book, a prayer book in Slavonic, was produced in Wallachia in 1508 and the first book in Romanian, a catechism, was printed in Transylvania, in 1544. Until the 18th century written culture mainly consisted of historical, moral, religious and legal writings. An outstanding personality of that time was Prince Dimitrie Cantemir (1673-1723), for a short while ruler of Moldavia, who was prominent in various areas of humanist culture: history, philosophy, music and literature. He was known in the learned Europe as a remarkable scholar, author of writings in Latin. Descriptio Moldaviae, a book on Moldavia, was commissioned by the Academy of Berlin, a member of which he became in 1714. Incrementa atque decrementa aulae othomanicae, a remarkable work on the growth and regress of the Ottoman Empire) was also printed in English in 1734-1735 (second edition in 1756), in French (1743) and German (1745). The latter was a major reference work in European science and culture until the 19th century.

Romania's history has been full of rebounds: the culturally productive epochs were those of stability, when the people of this country proved quite an impressive resourcefulness in making up for less propitious periods and were able to rejoin the mainstream of European culture. This stands true for the years after the Phanariot rule, at the beginning of the 19th century, when Romanians had a favourable historical context and chose a Western way of life, mainly the French model, which they pursued steadily and at a very fast pace. From the end of the 18th century, the sons of the upper classes started having their education in Paris, and French became something like the second language of culture for Romanians, until the communist years. The formative role of France – especially in the fields of political ideas, administration and law, as well as in literature – was paralleled by German culture, from the mid-19th century down to World War I. Many intellectuals of Moldavia, for instance, studied in Berlin. In Transylvania and the Banat, the Hapsburg rule and the presence of the ethnic German population (the Saxons in Transylvania and the Swabians in the Banat), in the local communities, triggered constant relationships with the German world not only at a cultural level but in daily life as well. The German influence was felt especially in the humanities (philosophy, logic, philology, history) and technical sciences.

The period of radical changes and modernization in Romanian culture coincided with the foundation of the nation-state, when Moldavia and Wallachia united in 1859. The national identity was thus defined in relation to the European model. Later on, after the completion of all Romanians' union into one state in 1918, the decades of peace between the two world wars let Romanian culture flourish in synchrony with European values. It is interesting to note that there kept being disputes between conservatives and advocates of progress, between passionate champions of Western culture and equally passionate and well-read champions of local tradition, which was in fact highly beneficial for culture. 19th century Romanticism was for Romania, as it was for all the nations of Europe, a time when traditional folk culture came to be valued as a creative resource for learned culture, and folklore substance was blended together with Western forms and themes. The outcome was the emergence of the triad of great classics in the Romanian literature in the latter half of the 19th century: Mihai Eminescu (1850-1889), Romanian national poet par excellence, Ion Luca Caragiale (1852-1912), the greatest Romanian playwright, and Ion Creangă (1837-1889), whose role in Romanian literature is that of a Mark Twain or Andersen.

Constantin Brancusi (1876-1957), the father of abstract sculpture in the 20th century grew from the deepest roots of his native land's traditions and reached the essence of universal truth.

In the interwar cultural life, defining collective identity through the relationship between traditional and West European trends was a hot subject. Outstanding personalities joined in the debates and polemics. Nae Ionescu (1890-1940), Mircea Vulcănescu (1904-1952) and Lucian Blaga (1895-1961) insisted on the traditional component, while others, like Eugen Lovinescu (1881-1943), championed the European approach.

The overwhelming personality of Nicolae Iorga (1871-1940) brought into European debate both the Romanian historiography and the Romanians' history.

During communism, the freedom of expression was constantly restricted in various ways. The Sovietization period was marked by an attempt at building up a new cultural identity based on socialist realism; they tried to legitimize the new order by rejecting traditional values. That trend, which flourished at the time of the communist take-over, gave way to a relative relaxation of dogmatism and of ideological control in the 1960s. Ceaușescu's dictatorship brought new pressures to impose a shallow and shrill kind of nationalism especially during the 1970s and 1980s. The attitude of the regime towards the intelligentsia varied from purges and interdictions (mass wide in the 1950s) to attracting it into the trap of privileges. The official, communist culture and genuine culture were separated by a chasm. On the one hand, in spite of the official intentions, outstanding works were perceived as a realm of moral truths, and public opinion held the significant representatives of genuine cultural achievement in very high esteem. On the other hand, the slogans disseminated nation-wide by official culture helped spread simplistic views, pseudo-truths which met with relative favour in certain walks of life. The tension between these two directions can still be perceived at the level of society as a whole.

Another consequence of the communist attitude versus élites, in general, was the emergence, for the first time in Romania's history, of a diaspora, including great scientific and cultural personalities. Biologist George Emil Palade, Nobel Prize winner (1974), philosopher and logician Stéphane Loupasco, Mircea Eliade (1907-1986), the renowned historian of religions, Eugène Ionesco (1909-1994), the playwright of the absurd and Emil Cioran (1911-1996), "the greatest French-writing master of style after Pascal", are only a few names. The communist authorities in Romania, unlike most of the other countries in the Eastern bloc, permanently repudiated the Romanians who had left their country and labelled them as traitors. So, neither Mircea Eliade, nor Eugène Ionesco, or Emil Cioran, whose works were sporadically published in Romania after 1960, ever managed to return to their native country. After 1989 an earnest start was made in retrieving the values of the emigration and reintegrating its personalities in the culture of the mother country, though this process, too, has had its tensions and misunderstandings.

The fall of communism in 1989 acted as an incentive to culture, but the market economy and the difficulties of the transition faced it with a hard experience. With state and political control of culture discontinued, the long dreamt-of freedom of expression was gained; concurrently, though, subsidies from the State were withdrawn and culture was seriously affected by the side effects of the incipient market economy and by the poor, inadequate material resources. In fact, culture has had to cope with a variety of problems, one of them being a shift in the people's interest towards other areas such as the press and television. The search for a new cultural policy, relying on decentralization, seems to prevail now. People speak about a crisis of culture in this country, but if there is a crisis of culture, it is only at an institutional and economic level.

LITERATURE

After centuries of anonymous, oral traditions of Romanian folklore, the 16th-18th centuries saw the development of the written culture. It was in the late 18th century that the European clock started ticking for Romanian literature. That meant, on the one hand, that the structural universe of literature broke away from the earlier written culture. It was in fact a breakaway from the previous cultural world, caused by a radical change in the Romanian society – through a fast process of westernization and liberalization, a renewal in literary expression by its connection to the European styles; changes also took place in the institutional aspect of culture. The first half of the 19th century was a time of founding projects for a national literature. After 1830, all literary genres were approached, and creative writing became a profession. The renewal of language brought lots of invention, some of which was inadequate to Romanian and so not all was kept. There was an urgent appeal launched by the 1848 generation, by the writers involved in the 1848 revolutionary events, for capitalization on folklore, which was seen as a most valid source of aesthetic regeneration, owing to the simplicity and beauty of its language. Vasile Alecsandri (1821-1890) was a trailblazer in poetry, prose writing and drama, and he was also a collector of folklore. Costache Negruzzi (1808-1868) was the founder of the Romanian short story, a most interesting and original writer too.

In the second half of the 19th century a remarkable contribution was made by the Junimea cultural society (f. 1863) and especially by its mentor, Titu Maiorescu (1840-1917), who introduced aesthetic criteria in establishing a hierarchy of values. The review published by that society, Convorbiri literare, helped impose the great 19th century writers: Mihai Eminescu, Ion Luca Caragiale and Ion Creangă. Eminescu is to Romanians the very prototype of the poet and of poetry. He was conversant with both Western and Oriental philosophical speculation and, at the same time, was a great admirer of popular traditions. Due to his unique creative gift and his Weltanschauung, he gave maximum brilliance to Romanian Romanticism. Eminescu radically changed the poetic expression by doing away with rhetoric and expressing the essence of lyrical writing. Ion Luca Caragiale's plays are a sarcastic mirror of the Romanian society, standing out by their biting criticism of political obsession and moral vacillation, ridiculing the contradiction between pettiness and pretence. "Owing to the value of his comedies of morals and characters, unfortunately written in a language that does not have the advantage of international circulation, Ion Luca Caragiale is perhaps the greatest of the unknown playwrights," wrote Eugène Ionesco, the reputed founder of the theatre of the absurd. The Junimea Society also discovered and launched Ion Creangă, a matchless story teller standing out by the oral style he used in his work, as well as Ioan Slavici (1848-1925), a Transylvanian writer, the author of the first masterpiece of Romanian fiction (Mara, 1894). In opposition to Junimea and Convorbiri literare, the Literatorul literary circle and review carried the first manifestos of symbolism, which could be detected in the poems of Alexandru Macedonski (1854-1920).

Romania's literature between the two wars was flourishing and developed in an atmosphere of innovation and enthusiasms. Poetry gravitated around several great models: Tudor Arghezi (1880-1967), a poet of the materialization of abstractions blended with blunt, "primitive" expression, Lucian Blaga (1895-1961), who expressed metaphysical notions in an expressionistic poetry, George Bacovia (1881-1957), a symbolist poet of neurosis and despair, and Ion Barbu (1895-1964), a representative of hermetic poetry written with remarkable economy of expression and symbolic substance (he was also a brilliant mathematician). As far as prose writing is concerned, the time's big name was Liviu Rebreanu (1885-1944), whose novels Ion and The Forest of the Hanged are masterpieces indeed. The former is a realistic novel with naturalistic influences, a tragedy inspired from village life, and deprived of the idyllic note that had prevailed in Romanian literature before, as had been supported programmatically by the Semănătorul review and trend. The latter is the first psychological novel in the Romanian literature and refers to WWI. Mihail Sadoveanu (1880-1961) wrote a large number of novels, mainly historical, and stories, which are rather singular in Romanian literature owing to their metaphoric density and infusion of Oriental wisdom. A younger generation included Camil Petrescu (1894-1957) and Hortensia Papadat-Bengescu (1876-1955), who distinguished themselves in analytical prose writing.

Innovating tendencies were less spectacular in drama, mainly due to the taste of the time, which kept off the stage the theatre of ideas of Camil Petrescu, Lucian Blaga's drama of mythic dimension, or the plays by Mihail Sebastian (1907-1945), so outstanding due to the sensitivity and purity of their protagonists.

Literary criticism and essay writing matched the development of poetry and prose writing. Standing out in this domain is the singular personality of George Călinescu (1899-1965), who subjected the whole Romanian literature from its origins to the present to an axiological judgement and produced a monumental History of Romanian Literature.

Apart from the great personalities, that period saw such a diversification of trends as never registered before. Orthodox traditionalism, represented especially by the review Gândirea (1922-1944), headed by Nichifor Crainic (1889-1972), was opposed by modernism, promoted by the literary circle and review Sburătorul (1919-1922, 1926-1927), led by Eugen Lovinescu. Reviews of the avant-garde proper started being issued, facilitating the literary debut of Tristan Tzara (1896-1963), the founder of Dadaism, Gherasim Luca (1913-1994) and Ilarie Voronca (1903-1946), who later on made a name for themselves abroad much like Fundoianu (Benjamin Fondane, 1898-1944).

The connection of Romanian literature to the European trends, achieved by the interwar generation, was abruptly cut short by the onset of communism. The "proletcultism" of the '50s left little room for authentic literature and, although that trend was rejected in the late '60s, literature did not recover its onetime freedom of creation. It enjoyed instead the necessary financial resources as it was subsidized by the State and, in spite of ideological restrictions, disruptions like those experienced during the Stalinist decade were no longer possible. Genuine, valuable literature was extremely well received by readers, who identified in it the symbol of a civic attitude. Never before had there been such an accord between public and critical taste like the one in the last decade of Ceaușescu's dictatorship. Prose writers like Marin Preda (1922-1980) and Augustin Buzura, poets like Nichita Stănescu (1933-1983), Marin Sorescu (1936-1997), or Ana Blandiana drew praise from both prestigious critics (Nicolae Manolescu, Eugen Simion) and the readership. The last decade of Ceaușescu's regime saw the rise of a group of young writers (the so-called Generation of the '80s) who started a relentless struggle against the attempts to level the artistic language.

The years after 1990 have been a period of "tests" and also difficulties generated by the shift in the readers' interest towards literary works that had been inaccessible to them before or towards the mass media. Moreover, the constraints of a culture striving to survive without subsidies, in the conditions of an incipient market economy, influenced the publication of Romanian authors. However, the crisis has not affected writing as well. Young writers in particular (the "1990s writers") seem determined to rebuild the bridges towards readers.

ARCHITECTURE

During the Romanian mediaeval epoch there existed two types of construction, different in point of both materials and technique, which developed in parallel. The first is the popular architecture, whose most spectacular achievements were the wooden churches, especially those in the villages of Maramureş, the Banat and Apuseni Mountains, where tradition has survived to this day. In Maramureş, in Şurdeşti village, the 54-m high church spire built over 1721-1724 is among the tallest of this kind in Europe. The second comprises mainly monasteries, as well as princely courts or boyar mansions. Most of the old lay edifices were destroyed by times, wars, earthquakes and fires. In mediaeval architecture, influences of Western trends can be traced, to a greater or lesser extent, in all the three lands inhabited by Romanians. Such influences are stronger in Transylvania, and weaker in Moldavia, in forms absorbed by local and Byzantine tradition. In Wallachia, Western elements in architecture were even fewer; there, beginning in the 14th century, architecture was based on local adaptations of the Byzantine model (the Princely Church in Curtea de Argeş and the Cozia Monastery). There are monuments significant for the Transylvanian Gothic style preserved to this day, in spite of all alterations, such as the Black Church in Braşov (14th-15th c.) and a number of other cathedrals, as well as the Bran Castle in Braşov County (14th c.), the Hunyades Castle in Hunedoara (15th c.) a.o.

Transylvania also developed fortified towns extensively during the Middle Ages; their urban growth respected principles of functionality (the usual pattern is a central square with a church, narrow streets with sides linked here and there by archways). The cities of Sighişoara, Sibiu and Braşov are remarkable examples in that sense. Building greatly developed in Moldavia, too. A great number of fortresses were built or rebuilt during the reign of Moldavia's greatest prince, Stephen the Great (1457-1504). Suceava, Neamţ, Hotin, Soroca and others were raised at that time and successfully withstood the sieges laid by Sultan Mehmet II, the conqueror of Constantinople, or by the kings of Poland and Hungary. That was when the Moldavian style developed, a style of great originality and unity, evolved from a mixture of Gothic elements with the Byzantine structure of Eastern churches. Among such constructions, the monumental church of the Neamţ Monastery served, for more than a century, as a model for other Moldavian churches and monasteries. The style was continued and enriched brilliantly in the 16th century, under Stephen the Great's son, Petru Rareş (1527-1538; 1541-1546). The main innovation was the open or half-open porch and the exterior mural paintings (the churches of the Voroneț, Sucevița, and Moldovița monasteries). These churches of Northern Moldavia have become famous worldwide, due to the beautiful and elegant shapes, the coherent iconographic programme and the message encoded in the religious wrapping.

The 17th century, the zenith of the pre-modern Romanian civilization, brought about a more significant development of outstanding lay constructions (elegant mansions or sumptuous princely palaces in Wallachia and Moldavia, Renaissance-style seigniorial castles in Transylvania), as well as the expansion of great monasteries. The latter were endowed with schools, art workshops, and printing presses, therefore being significant cultural centres. To this period belongs the church of the Trei Ierarhi Monastery in Iași, erected in 1635-1639, a unique monument owing to its lavish decoration with carved geometric motifs, coloured in lapis lazuli and gold leaf, all over the façades. The architectural style developed in Wallachia, especially under Matei Basarab (1632-1654) and Constantin Brâncoveanu (1688-1714), evinces remarkable unity. The Brancovan style is characterized by integration of Venetian and Oriental features into the local tradition. Splendid examples are the Hurezi Monastery in Oltenia or the princely palace at Mogoșoaia, both of which are lavishly decorated with exquisite stone carvings, stucco and paintings. In the 18th century the number of religious constructions relatively decreased. The Phanariot rule brought Oriental elements in urban civil architecture in Wallachia and Moldavia. In Transylvania, the Baroque dominated both religious (the Roman-Catholic cathedrals in Timișoara and Oradea) and lay architecture (the Banffy Palace in Cluj and the Brukenthal Palace in Sibiu).

In the first half of the 19th century, urban life grew considerably and a Western-type modernization policy was pursued, due to which the Romanian architecture became a combination of Romantic and Neo-Classical elements. In the latter half of the century a national tendency developed, with elements and forms of the traditional local architecture being taken over. This trend was pioneered by Ion Mincu (1852-1912), the founder of the Romanian school of architecture. His works, such as the Lahovary House or the Central Girls' School in Bucharest, are among the most prominent achievements of this movement. Another trend accounts for houses and administrative buildings in the spirit of French eclecticism (the Justice Palace, the Central Post Office) or for adaptations of classicism (the building currently known as the House of Scientists, in the former Cantacuzino Palace in Bucharest). That was when the Romanian Athenaeum, one of the capital's most prominent buildings, was erected (1886-1888). All those French-looking buildings raised around 1900 were a reason to nickname Bucharest "Little Paris". Other important architects, like Petre Antonescu (1873-1965), Horia Creangă (1893-1943) and Duiliu Marcu (1885-1966) stood out by their commitment to simple, balanced and functional forms in line with contemporary European architecture. In the first decades of the 20th century, Romanian towns and cities still had a contrasting aspect, exhibiting a sharp difference between the sumptuous downtown buildings and the almost rural outskirts, while the villages remained basically unchanged from the architectural point of view. Nevertheless, the first signs of town planning appeared in some urban districts (the first two- or three-storied blocks of flats or family houses on two levels).

Industrialization and fast urban growth, forced especially in the last two communist decades, determined the emergence of long-series typified projects and pre-fab technology in the construction of 8-10 storied blocks of flats. Whole districts made up of such high-rises have levelled up the Romanian townscape. In the last years of Ceaușescu's rule, traditional urban central areas were destroyed, and replaced by conglomerates of blocks of flats, all while monumental public buildings, eclectically and blandly solemn, were being erected. Evidence of this intrusion of politics in the life of the city is the huge palace built in Bucharest on the dictator's order, now the Parliament Palace, whose construction required the demolition of several downtown quarters. As in so many other fields, the post-revolutionary Romanian world will be bound to find again in architecture the way that best serves its needs for functionality and aesthetic outlook.

THE FINE ARTS

Until the late 18th century the fine arts in the Romanian lands followed two distinct traditions: the Byzantine tradition (the two Romanian states of Moldavia and Wallachia and the Romanian Transylvanians) and the Western tradition (the zones inhabited by Transylvanian Saxons, Magyars, Szecklers and the Banat Swabians). This division was even more striking in the arts than in architecture, because of the rigorous iconographic standards kept by the church. Still, in some Orthodox churches in Transylvania, one can see remarkable artworks clearly influenced by Western styles and trends (e.g. the Gothic-style paintings at the Strei village church, in Hunedoara county, dating back to the 14th century). The blossoming mural painting in 14th century in Wallachia proved the existence of an old Byzantine tradition. The murals of the princely church in Curtea de Argeș, completed in 1362-1366, are among the most imposing achievements in Byzantine-type mural painting. They became models for muralists in the Romanian lands and Transylvania, who belonged to local schools of painting. Besides the features shared by the entire Eastern Orthodox world (archetypal and canonical models), Romanian painting had its own specific traits. This is true of frescoes, miniatures, liturgic embroidery and illuminations. A Four Gospels illuminated in 1429 by Gavril Uric, the first Romanian painter known by name, is now at the Bodleian Library of Oxford University. The 16th century Wallachian frescoes and, even more so, the exceptional exterior murals adorning the monasteries in Northern Moldavia (Bukovina) – Moldovița (1532-1537), Voroneț (1547) and Sucevița (1582-1596) – represent the last flourishing epoch in the history of Byzantine painting after the fall of Constantinople. These paintings display a harmonious composition, well-balanced relation between the whole and the details, and brilliant colours.

Sculpture holds a modest place in the Middle Ages in the principalities outside the Carpathian arc, the Byzantine-type monuments being in general devoid of carved decorations. One of the few exceptions is the 16th century church of Curtea de Argeș Monastery, commissioned by Wallachian ruler Neagoe Basarab (1512-1521) and decorated lavishly with elements displaying a southern influence. In Transylvania, instead, sculpture was extensively used in the decoration of Catholic churches.

Detachment from Byzantine canons, characteristic of the 17th and 18th centuries, reached an acme in the 19th century, when lay art came to prevail and arts, in general, mirrored modern life both by their subject (portraits and historical scenes) and in point of techniques (easel painting) or artistic trends (Academism and Romanticism). Foreign artists invited from Austria, Germany, Poland or Italy to paint upper-class family portraits introduced such trends, styles and fashions. Early in the fifth decade of the 19th century, the first Romanian artists educated in the West started making a name for themselves. Most had been schooled in Germany, but after 1850 the French vogue made its way in painting. Theodor Aman (1831-1891) and Gheorghe Tattarescu (1820-1894), representatives of Academism, were the first beneficiaries of West European education. Nicolae Grigorescu (1838-1907), who brought landscape painting into Romanian arts, and Ioan Andreescu (1850-1882) completed their training alongside the Barbizon painters, while Ștefan Luchian (1868-1916) assimilated the post-Impressionist experience in Paris. With them, Romanian painting made its brilliant entrance into the zone of modernity. These three great painters also represent three types of reception and sensitivity. Grigorescu's portraits of peasant girls, effusive and proud, and particularly his landscapes full of lyricism are quite remarkable. Andreescu, one of the most profound Romanian artists, had an unmistakable call for melancholy landscapes. Luchian added a tragic intensity to the delicacy and grace of the flowers that made him famous.

In the same period, the resumed ties with ancient tradition entailed a renewal in the sculptural idiom, obvious in the works of Dimitrie Paciurea (1873-1932) and Constantin Brancusi (1876-1957). Paciurea, the first Romanian artist to excel in monumental sculpture, resorted to the mythological and fantastic vein of folk traditions (chimeras, sphinxes). Brancusi, who settled in Paris in 1904, restructured the whole 20th century art and became the founder of this century's abstract sculpture. A few of his works are in Romania: Prayer (1907) – an essentialized image of piety, Wisdom of the Earth, and the ensemble (1936-1938) at Târgu Jiu, a town close to his native village of Hobița, consisting of the Endless Column, The Table of Silence and of the Gate of the Kiss. The sculptures at Târgu Jiu were dedicated to the Romanian soldiers who died in World War I. They make up the world's only open-air ensemble of sculptures by Brancusi. The interwar period brought considerable diversification and innovation to Romanian painting, which absorbed a variety of modern trends. Nicolae Tonitza (1886-1940), Francisc Șirato (1877-1953) and Lucian Grigorescu (1894-1965) are among the best-known names. Another worthy painter is Gheorghe Petrașcu (1872-1949), whose work is characterized by a sumptuous palette, with a mineral glow, as well as by an energetic and noble attitude. Theodor Pallady (1871-1956), a friend of Matisse's, is characterised by rigorous composition and discreet colours. The Romanian avant-garde is represented by Victor Brauner (1903-1966), who would later become famous in France, Marcel Iancu (1895-1984), the abstractionist Hans Mattis-Teutsch (1884-1960) and many others.

The communist period tried to confine the arts, like all the other domains, into the fetters of ideological dogmatism, but as elsewhere, ideological canons were defied in the most diversified forms: Ion Țuculescu (1910-1962) cultivated oneirism and symbolism, Alexandru Ciucurencu (1903-1977) resorted to chromatic synthesis, while Corneliu Baba (1906-1998) turned to synthetic and dramatic realism. Sculpture had Ion Jalea (1887-1983) and Cornel Medrea (1889-1964), who produced remarkable monumental sculptures, and Gheorghe Anghel (1904-1966), whose statues of great Romanian personalities are very much appreciated due to his ability to capture a spiritual quality of the portraits.

The Romanian drama and theatre were, historically, rather late to appear, but then they evolved rapidly and steadily. Until the 19th century theatrical performances actually were shows performed at the princely courts or boyards' mansions or folk shows; the latter still exist, especially in special forms staged for Christmas and the New Year. The first performance in Romanian, a school show, took place at Blaj, in Transylvania, in 1755. It was in that town, too, that a text was specially written for the stage in 1780.

The official birth date of Romanian theatre is December 27, 1816, when writer Gheorghe Asachi (1788-1869) organized in Iași the first Romanian performance based on a drama by Florian. In 1817 Romania had its first theatres. One of them, the Theatre of Cîșmeaua Roșie in Bucharest, was built on the initiative of Princess Ralu, the daughter of ruling Prince Caragea. By mid-century, the Romanian society's interest in theatre made it possible to have an almost continuous presence of foreign troupes in the two capitals, Iași and Bucharest. Drama schools were founded by the Philharmonic Society in Bucharest (1833) and by the Philharmonic and Drama Conservatoire in Iași (1836), and state-run schools for theatrical education were also set up (1864). The first independent troupes appeared in 1852. Since the establishment of the National Theatres in Bucharest and Iași to our times, Romanian theatre has been subsidized by the state, which has helped both the playwrights and the actors.

The first notable playwright was Vasile Alecsandri (1821-1890), a trailblazer in theatre (dramas, comedies) and all fields of literature. The best known character of his comedies, Madame Chirița, a provincial upstart hankering to enter the high society, has had a durable and successful career. At the end of the 19th century, the great and unique Romanian playwright Ion Luca Caragiale (A Lost Letter, 1884, is the masterpiece of his writings and of Romanian drama), and a number of great actors brought brilliance to the Romanian theatre. Paul Gusty (1859-1944), who was a stage director with the National Theatre in Bucharest for almost six decades, was practically the one to start the Romanian stage directing, at the very beginning of the 20th century. Dramatic literature was enriched by such remarkable writers as Barbu Ștefănescu Delavrancea (1858-1918), author of a historical trilogy about Moldavia during the reign of Stephen the Great and his son Petru Rareș. Psychological drama appeared, and social issues came to be approached, too. Outstanding dramatists in the inter-war period were Camil Petrescu, Lucian Blaga and Mihail Sebastian. In the '30s and '40s many private theatre companies were set up, some of which had a successful activity until 1949, when private theatres were disbanded. Stage directors like Soare Z. Soare, Ion Sava, G.M. Zamfirescu, Sică Alexandrescu, alongside great actors as were for instance Zaharia Bârsan, Marioara Voiculescu, Lucia Sturdza Bulandra, Tony Bulandra and Iancu Brezeanu raised the Romanian theatre to high standards of professionalism and modernization and introduced new experiments in the interpretation of naturalistic, expressionist and symbolist types of theatre.

During the communist regime, several stage directors made a name for themselves: Liviu Ciulei, Lucian Giurchescu, Radu Penciulescu, Lucian Pintilie, Andrei Șerban, David Esrig, Ion Cojar and others. Some of them emigrated in the later decades of communism and are notable names in international theatre.

After 1989, the Romanian theatre continued to win acclaim on various stages of the world thanks to its exceptional actors and original stage directors: Silviu Purcărete, Cătălina Buzoianu, Tompa Gabor and Mihai Măniuțiu. A new generation of playwrights has emerged these years. The number of theatres rose from 14-16, on the eve of World War II, to 45-50 in the '70s and '80s and 52 in 1996. The number of spectators fluctuated. From 1.5 million in 1938, it increased to 6-7 million in the '80s and dropped to 1 million in the last few years. Currently audiences are again growing.

MUSIC

Romanian folk music is, like elsewhere, the oldest form of musical creation, its characteristic vitality preserved to this day. Its exceptional qualities and ancientness made it an admirable source for cultured music, both religious and lay. The fact that folk music is still very much alive and appreciated is also due to great performers, such as the world-famous panpipe player Gheorghe Zamfir. Since the beginning of the 20th century, with Constantin Brăiloiu (1893-1958) and his school of ethnomusicology, folk music has been an object of systematic research.

The Byzantine type of monodic religious music, based on voices, usually without instrumental accompaniment, was widely practiced in church. Byzantine canons were nevertheless interestingly touched by the local musical influences. Liturgical music had its heyday between the 15th-17th centuries, when reputed schools developed at Romanian monasteries, the best known being that at Putna Monastery. They developed unaccompanied church choir, under both Russian and Western influence. That kind of synthesis, in the area of polyphonic music, was subsequently developed by a number of Romanian composers in the 19th and 20th centuries; prominent among them was Dumitru Georgescu-Kiriak (1866-1928).

Lay music developed its own traits in the Romanian Principalities by the end of the 18th century. Western patterns prevailed in Transylvania in both instrumental music (particularly the organ) and vocal music, while Oriental influences were mainly taken over in Wallachia and Moldavia. However, after several foreign musicians had come to these countries and tours by foreign opera troupes started, a drive towards Western music evolved in Wallachia and Moldavia as well. In the latter half of the 19th century, the most important musical institutions were founded: the Conservatoires in Bucharest and Iași in 1864, the Romanian Opera House in Bucharest, in 1866 (the Conservatoire in Cluj had been set up as early as 1825). That was also the time when the national school of music emerged, based chiefly on choral music inspired from folk or Byzantine music. Great opera singers rose to fame. Haricleea Darclée (1860-1939), for instance, made a name for herself on the great opera stages of the world. She was the one who first sang Tosca, when that opera was premiered in 1900.

The great George Enescu (1881-1955), a composer (author of Oedipus, one of this century's most outstanding operas, the two Romanian Rhapsodies a.o.) as well as conductor and instrumentalist, made Romanian music transcend local boundaries. He was, along with his Hungarian contemporary and friend Béla Bartók (himself born at Sânnicolau Mare near Timișoara), a great explorer of the Romanian folk music traditions, which he used in his profoundly original and creative search for new formal ways of artistic expression.

Between the two world wars, the Romanian music school was represented on international stages by great performers and conductors: pianists Dinu Lipatti (1917-1950) and Clara Haskil (1895-1960), conductors Ionel Perlea (1900-1970) and Sergiu Celibidache (1912-1996), who developed their careers abroad, or George Georgescu (1887-1964) and Constantin Silvestri (1913-1969), and others. Innovative trends were present through Mihail Jora (1891-1971), the first to compose lieder and ballet music, Paul Constantinescu (1909-1963), the author of oratorios inspired from the Byzantine vein of the old Romanian music, Sabin Drăgoi (1894-1968), the first to compose a musical drama based on Romania's history, Dimitrie Cuclin (1885-1978), Mihail Andricu (1894-1974) and Sigismund Toduță (1908-1991). In the last few decades, conductors, instrumentalists and singers won great acclaim at home and abroad. The George Enescu Philharmonic Orchestra and the Madrigal Choir are only two names on a long list of international achievements.

Of late the country's European options certainly have put conditions in place for rebuilding bridges towards the international musical life, either by the participation of Romanian musicians in international events or by having such events happen in Romania, such as the prestigious George Enescu International Festival, resumed after 1989, and The Days of New Music, held in Bucharest.

There existed two opera houses before World War II, five in 1960 and six at present. The number of musical and variety theatres dropped from 19 in 1985 to 12 at present, while the number of philharmonic and symphony orchestras grew from 10 in 1950 to 17 at present. Audiences also varied: 2 million in 1950, 3 million in 1980, 1.1 million at present.

FILMMAKING

The first cinema projections in Romania, of Lumière films, took place on May 27, 1896, five months after their Parisian première, in the Bucharest editorial offices of the French-language newspaper L'Indépendance Roumaine. One year later, photographer Paul Manu used a Lumière camera to produce the first Romanian newsreels. In 1898-1901, Dr. Gheorghe Marinescu, a reputed specialist in central nervous system disorders, achieved the world's first scientific research films, which he showed at specialized international conferences. In 1912, when feature film was just being born in Italy, the Romanians completed the first representative Romanian feature film, Independența României (Romania's Independence, directed by Grigore Brezeanu and Aristide Demetriade), a story on the Romanian army's participation in the 1877-1878 Russian-Romanian-Turkish war, with the cast including prime actors from the National Theatre in Bucharest.

Unfortunately the subsequent evolution of Romanian filmmaking failed to match the beginnings. Scarce financial resources are the main reason for a sporadic national film production. Though the latest West-European and American films were screened, the public was offered also the documentaries and newsreels Romanian filmmakers never ceased producing. The 1934 creation, by law, of a National Fund for Filmmaking and the State's direct involvement in film production helped the emergence, in the late '30s, of an official body in this area (the National Office of Cinematography), of a film review and of a film studio in Bucharest. The first Romanian film to win an international prize (at the Venice Festival) was Paul Călinescu's documentary The Land of Motzi, made in 1939. In 1942 the Romanian filmmaking gave the most important production of its early stages, the comedy A Stormy Night, directed by Jean Georgescu, an outstanding director, actor and screenwriter.

After World War II, with the nationalization of the filmmaking industry (1948), the communist state imposed its absolute control over film production and distribution. Three large studios were established: one for feature films at Buftea, near Bucharest, another one for documentaries (the Alexandru Sahia Studio) and a third one for cartoons (Animafilm). State subsidies made it possible to develop and diversify the film production: as many as 20-30 feature films, over 100 documentaries and 15 cartoons were produced early in the '70s. The number of cinema halls increased from 338 (1938) to over 6,000 in the '70s, and that of spectators from 41 million in 1938 to 190-200 million per year in the '80s. In the '70s some 120-140 films were imported every year, mainly from Central and East European states. The National Film Archives were established in 1957.

The first films of the postwar period were marked by the insufficient experience in the field and also by a stifling censorship. The first notable film was produced in 1957: The Lucky Mill, by director Victor Iliu (1912-1968). In 1965, The Forest of the Hanged, the third film by director Liviu Ciulei (who later switched to theatre, starting an international career), was awarded the best director prize in Cannes. Both were based on two classical novels, an area where the communist censorship seemed less pervasive. In the '70s and '80s again the attempts of talented filmmakers to avoid political interference resulted in remarkably beautiful period films or in metaphorical productions. Between the '60s and the '80s Sergiu Nicolaescu's historical and adventure films were a great box-office success. Notable successes were obtained also in the area of cartoons, the founder of which was I. Popescu-Gopo (1923-1989), who won the Grand Prix in Cannes in 1957 for his Short History. The same award went in 1969 to the short documentary The Songs of Revival directed by Mirel Ilișiu.

After the collapse of communism, the much coveted freedom of creation could not be turned to best account in this field because of the general economic crisis, the rise in production costs, the dramatic fall in State subsidies and defective management. Competition from foreign films (mainly American ones), brought over by a powerful private distribution network, and the great spread of cable television, account for the shrinking number of filmgoers viewing Romanian films. In the '90s film production has declined from 25-30 feature films before 1989 to an annual 10-12 in 1993 and 2 in 1998; Romanian cartoons, once highly appreciated on the world market, have virtually disappeared and so has the documentary film, which had a long tradition and an international renown. The number of cinema halls and of seats has dramatically fallen and the number of filmgoers went down from a peak 211 million in 1988 to 130 million in 1990 and to only 7.2 million in 1998. But, although in terms of quantity Romanian film production is insignificant, in point of quality Romanian films are competitive, as attested by participation in the major international festivals. A prominent role today is played by directors who have already produced notable films: Lucian Pintilie (Reconstruction, 1970; Terminus Paradis, Special Jury Prize at the Venice Film Festival in 1998), Mircea Daneliuc (Microphone Test, 1981; The Senator of Snails, 1995), Dan Pița (who received the Silver Lion trophy at the 1992 Venice Film Festival for his De Luxe Hotel), Radu Gabrea, who returned to the country after 1990, Mircea Veroiu (1941-1994), a refined filmmaker who authored films of great formal beauty (The Stone Wedding, 1972), Stere Gulea (State of Fact, awarded the Targa d'oro prize at the San Marino Festival in 1996) or by young directors who are currently pursuing international careers, like Nae Caranfil or Radu Mihăileanu.
